Eastern Asia Minor and the Caucasus in Ancient Mythologies (1993).

This study examines the geographical references and allusions to eastern Asia Minor and the Caucasus in the ancient myths of the Greeks, Sumerians, Hurrians, Iranians, and Indians, and analyzes the images they define.

During the past century, significant comparative analysis has been done on the Armenian and Georgian deities and their would-be counterparts in the pantheons of neighboring societies. The works of scholars such as the Armenists Abeghian, Adontz, Ananikian, Karst, Khalatiants', and Matikian, and the Caucasiologists Allen, Charachidze, Grigolia, Inadze, and Tseretheli, belong in this category. Similarly, the works of mythologists such as W. Burkert, G. Dumezil, and K. Kerenyi have at their base comparative analyses of deities, their functions, and the shared themes found in western and eastern mythologies. The geographical focus adopted in the present study both expands the volume of pertinent source material and, simultaneously, frees it from the requirement of having to possess some echo in the extant mythologies of the Armenians and Georgians. Zipped HTML files or pdf available.

Soma among the Armenians (2000). This study examines the thesis of R. Gordon Wasson and his colleagues about the Amanita Muscaria mushroom, and then examines several ancient Armenian legends and customs in the light of those findings. A first look at the ethnobotany of the Armenian Highlands. Zipped HTML files or pdf available.

References to Eastern Asia Minor in the Bible (2009). The few but precious references to eastern Asia Minor found in the Bible may be divided into three general categories: 1) geographical, 2) tribal-ethnic, and 3) commerce-related. This brief article examines these references in greater detail and provides links to relevant Internet secondary sources, such as Igor Diakonoff's Pre-history of the Armenian People, and Cyril Toumanoff's Studies in Christian Caucasian History. HTML file.

Materials for the Study of Extraterrestrial Presence in Human History Based on Ancient Primary Sources (2012). This is an investigation of a handful of passages in ancient primary sources which stand out for their strangeness, and seem to suggest that extraterrestrials or intelligent non-humans had some role in early human history. The essay discusses the Oannes creatures/entities described in Eusebius' Chronicle, as well as Mesopotamian and Biblical narratives about human origins, exterminations, and the intermarriage of humans with their creators. The airship supposedly described in the Book of Ezekiel is included for documentation purposes. The article's footnotes contain links to a good deal of reliable downloadable material by specialists. Dayeakut'iwn in Ancient Armenia. This article was published in Armenian Review Vol.37(1984) pp. 23-47. A Polish translation (made by Leon Ter-Oganjan) appeared in pamphlet: Robert Bedrosjan, Dajekut'iun (Warsaw, 1987). This is a study of milk-brotherhood, an unusual form of child rearing practised in ancient Armenia and other parts of the Caucasus. In Armenia it involved the young sons of the country's lords or naxarars, who were sent to the sometimes distant districts of other lords, to be raised and educated there. Probably at age fifteen the youth returned to his own home, perhaps with a bride from his "adopted" family. Between the youth (called the san "pupil," "foster child," "protege") and the host naxarar (called the dayeak), a life-long bond existed; should the youth go home with a wife, the mutual interests of two naxarar Houses might be advanced. How ancient this practice was among the Armenians cannot be determined accurately. The earliest historical sources written in Armenian date from the fifth century A.D.; but dayeakut'iwn may have been practiced in Armenia many centuries earlier. In one form or another, dayeakut'iwn endured into the nineteenth century, though information on the more modern survivals of the custom comes from Georgia and other parts of the Caucasus rather than from Armenia. Armenian Paulicianism and the Key of Truth. This study, which appeared in the American Journal of Theology 10 (1906) pp. 267-285, was written by the historian and theologian Leon Arpee. It is an analysis of information found in Greek and Armenian historical and ecclesiastical sources about the Paulicians, dissident iconoclastic Christians of Western Armenia. Hated and persecuted by both the Greek and Armenian Church establishments and savaged by the Byzantine military, the Paulicians in the 9th century made common cause with the Muslims. They were a power to be reckoned with, doctrinally and militarily, and were never destroyed as an ideological current. Mystical Sufism and extremist (ghulat) Shiism were to develop and thrive in the same geographical area once controlled by the Paulicians. Deported to the Balkans, some Paulicians founded kindred movements such as the Bogomils, and may have had an influence on the development of Protestantism in Europe. The Key of Truth, the Paulicians' only surviving work of doctrine, is examined in detail.

Quuudauly Gandzak. This is a study of the district of Gandzak (Kirovabad/modern Ganja), an area which frequently passed back and forth among Armenian, Aghuan, and Iranian states in the pre-Turkic period. The bulk of the study concentrates on the 19th-20th centuries when Armenians were still an important part of the population. The author, the renowned ethnographer/folklorist Ervand Lalayan (1864-1931), founded the Armenian Ethnographic Society (1901) as well as the scholarly journal Azgagrakan Hande's [Ethnographic Review] (1895-1916). Topics include: 1. Historical Survey (large section on the Armenian Melik families); 2. Topography: noteworthy Armenian villages, monasteries, fortresses, German settlements, Russian Molakan settlements, Turkish villages (descriptions include population statistics); 3. Ethnography: dwellings of Armenians; clothing and ornaments; family system and customs; beliefs. This download includes both volume 1
